Latest COVID-19 restrictions

Helping you understand and find the official information

The COVID-19 situation is rapidly changing around the country and this morning new restrictions have been announced for parts of Queensland.

In the Local Government Areas (LGAs) of Noosa, Sunshine Coast, Ipswich, Logan, Redlands, Moreton Bay, Brisbane, Gold Coast, Scenic Rim, Lockyer Valley and Somerset new restrictions will apply from 1:00am AEST tomorrow, 29 June 2021 including:

- Mask wearing

- Seated dining
- Reduced capacities for venues and gatherings

There are also restrictions in place for all other parts of Queensland including reduced capacities.

OFFICIAL INFORMATION

Visitors already in Queensland

- If you have guests who've been in the South East Queensland LGAs (listed above) in the last 14 days, they will also need to follow the mask requirements. Information here.
- Anyone who has been in any of the 35 LGAs of Greater Sydney must follow the stay-at-home requirements. Information here.

As the situation evolves in multiple states and territories, border restrictions are also changing. If you have interstate guests currently staying in your accommodation or travelling with you, they should keep a close eye on Queensland requirements as well as their home state requirements.

All travellers should also regularly check the contact tracing alerts for Queensland and other states where they may have recently travelled. In Queensland, if you have been in a venue that has a contact tracing alert, health advice ranging from getting a COVID-19 test to entering isolation or hotel quarantine may apply. Monitor this page for alerts and relevant public health advice.

Visitors arriving to Queensland

Visitors arriving to Queensland must complete a travel declaration - information here. COVID-19 hotspot declarations remain in place for the Greater Sydney area.

Visitors should also keep up to date with any requirements in place in their home state for returning from Queensland, as the situation continues to change.
